THE DECENT BRAND VOICE

Element	Decent's Approach	What We Avoid
Personality	A wry, calm witness to the flames. Poetic but grounded. Speaks like someone who's made peace with chaos and dressed for it.	Toxic positivity, "everything happens for a reason," hustle-culture pep talks, hollow nihilism.
Humour	Dark, observational, slightly absurd. The laugh you share when the alert goes off and you finish your coffee anyway. Never cruel.	Punny, dad jokes, sarcasm that wounds, cringe relatability, "we're all mad here" clichés.
Sentence Length	Short to medium. Occasionally a longer, rhythmic sentence that lands like ash drifting down—used sparingly for weight.	Overly academic, run-on philosophy, breathless sentences that lose the point.
Vocabulary	Ash, embers, still here, decent, drift, witness, quiet, collapse, glow, unravel, steady, ruin, thread, small fire, ordinary apocalypse. Words that carry texture and time.	"Disrupt," "grind," "viral," "crush it," "manifest," "vibe check," "elevate your mindset," any jargon that smells of a LinkedIn post.
Emotional Register	Acceptance with a side of elegance. A low, steady hum of resolve. Not joy, not despair—something older. The quiet that follows a decision.	Manic energy, performative despair, forced gratitude, empty "good vibes only."

PLATFORM VOICE NUANCES

Instagram

Tone: A gallery of quiet witness. Slightly more visual poetry, slightly more mystery.

Pacing: Slow scrolls. Carousel captions that read like fragmented field notes. Short, weighted sentences. Space between thoughts.

Purpose: Build the world. Make people pause, save, sit with an image.

Example vibe: "New drop. Old ash. Still decent."

TikTok

Tone: The same dark humor, but with a quicker heartbeat. More conversational, almost like a muttered aside as the sky turns strange. We keep one hand on the platform's rhythm so the scroll slows, but doesn't stop us from being heard.

Pacing: Voiceovers carry weighty pauses, but the edit moves with the viewer's thumb—a beat of silence, then a sharp cut, a smouldering image, a wry line landing on the downbeat.

Sound design: Minimal, textured. A low drone, distant static, or a warped string—never frantic pop tracks. Silence used as punctuation, not a gap.

Purpose: Reach new eyes, show we're in on the joke without cheapening it. "Come for the vibe, stay for the philosophy."

Example vibe: Quick cut of embers floating, then a hoodie in motion, voiceover: "The world didn't end today. I'll wear the same thing tomorrow. Decent."

Website

Tone: The manifesto unfolds here. More immersive, more poetic, with room for longer cadence. This is the brand holding eye contact.

Pacing: Longer paragraphs that breathe. Product descriptions that treat a t-shirt like a relic—what it's made of, what it's for, what it means to wear it while the world does what it does.

Purpose: Convert through conviction. Someone reads the About page and thinks, finally, someone said it. Then they buy the hoodie.

Email

Tone: A letter from a clear-eyed friend. Intimate, slightly warmer, but never soft. The kind of message you'd read in low light with a drink that stings.

Pacing: Personal and unhurried. Opens with an observation about the world, then quietly mentions a new drop or restock. No urgent countdown timers, just a gentle reminder that some things are worth wearing while we wait.

Purpose: Nurture the community. Make subscribers feel like they're part of a small, unspoken congregation.

BRAND PILLARS

#1

Existential Acceptance (Heart of Decent)
We don’t promise salvation. We acknowledge that chaos has been the baseline since the first spark caught. There’s no “fixing” the world—only witnessing it clearly, without flinching, and choosing to remain present.

#2

Quiet Rebellion
Not shouting at the void, but dressing well in defiance of it. This is rebellion as personal elegance—refusing to perform panic, refusing to buy into hollow optimism, refusing to dress sloppily just because the culture is collapsing.

#3

Style as Survival
Looking good isn’t vanity; it’s a form of composure when everything else unravels. Clothes as ritual, as readiness. A well-cut tee or a textured hoodiebecomes a small, private act of self-respect amidst the drift.

#4

Community of the Clear-Eyed
Decent speaks to those who see the same cracks and keep waking up. No clubhouse, no hype, just a shared understanding: the apocalypse is ordinary, and you’re not alone in noticing.

DO'S & DON'TS

- Acknowledge the chaos, then turn toward style.
- Add a wry twist, never a lecture.
- Keep it visually and verbally stylish.
- Speak to the clear-eyed, not the masses.
- Treat the brand as a quiet companion, not a hero.
- Use silence and space as design elements.
- Anchor everything in Pillar 1: Existential Acceptance.
- Engage darkly curious skeptics with a wit that includes, not excludes.

- Fake optimism or offer hollow comfort.
- Rush the reader with desperate "buy now" energy.
- Chase trends that age badly.
- Punch down or be mean for the sake of humour.
- Over-explain the philosophy.
- Get sentimental.
- Mention competitors or define ourselves against anything specific.
- Say "everything happens for a reason."

SAMPLE BRAND STATEMENTS

Tagline:

"The apocalypse is ordinary. Dress decent."

Instagram Bio:

"Decent makes clothes for the long emergency. We accept the chaos—quietly, steadily—and dress like we knew it was coming."

Website Manifesto (About Page):

Armageddon isn't a prophecy; it's a condition. Since the first spark caught, we've been living in the rubble of something. Wars, plagues, environmental collapses, the imminence of AI—the chaos is not coming, it's here, and it has always been here. There is no fix. There is no reason. But there is this: we can face it well-dressed.

Decent is a small, steady act of defiance. A heavyweight t-shirt for the slow apocalypse. A hoodie for the strange, soft moments in the crossfire. We don't offer hope. We offer composure. We don't promise survival. We promise you'll look decent, whatever comes.

This is not a brand for everyone. It's for the ones who see the ash drifting and still choose a textured black tee. For the monks dancing before the wave. For the paramedic running into the collapsing building. For anyone who has ever kissed like the world was ending—because, in a very ordinary way, it always is.

Welcome to the community of the clear-eyed. The fire is still burning. So are we. So we dress.

Email Welcome Opener:

Subject: The sky did something strange again.

Body:

And I thought of you.

Not in a sentimental way—just a quiet nod from across the room of the world. You're here because you see it too. The ash. The drift. The strange, steady hum of things coming apart and people still kissing in the middle of the road.

This is Decent. We make clothes for people who've noticed that things are, and always have been, a little bit on fire. No desperate countdowns. No toxic optimism. Just well-made things to wear while you watch the embers settle.

The ash lands differently on a decent shirt. You'll see.

Welcome. If you need anything, reply. I'll be here, probably in black.

—Decent
